Percival M. Brown Succumbs to Illness
Member of District Bar and Director of the Chamber of Commerce

Following an illness of several months in which no hope was held out for his recover, Percival M. Brown, a member of the District bar and a director in the Chamber of Commerce, died at his residence, 1357 Euclid street at 2:30 o'clock this morning.

Mr. Brown was forty-two years of age and unmarried. His mother, Mrs. George Brown, and two sisters, Misses Elizabeth Brown, superintendent of primary instruction in the District public schools, and Catharine Brown were at his bedside when the end came.

Two brothers, George Brown of New York city, and Orville G. Brown, a surgeon in the United States Army, and at present stationed in the Philippine Islands, were notified this morning of his death. Funeral arrangements will not be completed until the arrival of the brother from New York.

Spent Life in Capital

Coming to Washington from Illinois with his parents in 1871, when he was two years of age, Mr. Brown was educated in this city, and had spent his entire life here. Following his graduation from National University, he was admitted to the bar seventeen years ago, and had been an active and successful practitioner.

He was made a director in the Chamber of Commerce at the last election of that body, and had been chairman of the school committee of the chamber since the formation of that committee. A special meeting of the board of directors of the chamber has been called for noon tomorrow to draw up resolutions of respect.

Besides belonging to the chamber, Mr. Brown was a member of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association, and at all times, took an active interest in matters related to the civic development of the capital. He was a member of the Bar Association and a director in the Park Savings Bank.

Operations Were in Vain

Shortly after his election to the directorate of the chamber last winter he was taken ill, but it was several months before the seriousness of his condition was realized. In an effort to regain his health several operations were resorted to, but these, without exception left him in a more weakened condition. He steadily became worse, until his physicians notified members of the family a few weeks ago that they despaired of his recovery.

Yesterday it was evident that the end was near, and, while it was thought that he might linger several days, his failure to survive the night was not unexpected.

Although funeral arrangements have not been completed, it was stated this morning that interment probably will be in Congressional cemetery. Mr. Brown's father, who died more than a year ago, is buried there.

District Courts Adjourn

Chief Justice Clabough of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia this morning adjourned. Equity Court No. 1 out of respect to the memory of Mr. Brown. Similar action was taken in the other branches of the court.

The announcement of Mr. Brown's death was made to Chief Justice Clabaugh by Alexander H. Bell, president of the Bar Association, who asked that an adjournment be taken. After paying a tribute to the character of Mr. Brown and his ability as a lawyer, the chief justice directed the adjournment.

Resolutions of Sorrow

Eulogistic remarks on the life and character of the deceased were made at the meetings of the various organizations yesterday, which appointed committees to represent them at the funeral.

A. Leftwich Sinclair, who presented resolutions of sorrow that were adopted by the Chapter of Commerce, said the following:

"Mr. Brown was an active member of the Chamber of Commerce from the time of its organization, and I regarded him as one of its strongest members. He was elected a director of the chamber at the election held in January last, receiving 414 votes next to the highest number of ballots cast for a director or an officer. I know Mr. Brown well. He was one of my most intimate friends. This is not the time for eulogy, but I am constrained to say that, in his death, the District of Columbia has lost one who was a good citizen, a good lawyer, a good friend and, above all, a good man.
